Note that different text traditions may have somewhat different names for the same sutta. For example, the 8th sutta of the Dīgha Nikāya is called "Mahāsīhanāda" in some texts but "Kassapa-sīhanāda" in others; the 11th sutta is called "Kevaṭṭa" in some texts but "Kevaddha" in others; the 24th sutta is called "Pāthika" in some texts but "Pāṭika" in others; and the 31st is variously called by the names "Siṅgāla", "Sigālaka", and "Sigālovāda". Such variations are generally a matter of local preference or pronunciation, and do not indicate a radical difference in content.
